Emergency relief efforts are under way in Cape Town after a runaway fire, which is believed to have been started by a vacated vagrant fire, destroyed parts of the Rhodes Memorial restaurant and caused unknown damage to some of the buildings on the University of Cape Town's (UCT) Upper Campus. The fire started at around 8.45am on Sunday morning on Table Mountain.

UCT has since set up an emergency relief fund for approximately 4,000 of its displaced students after having to evacuate some of its residences. Emergency accommodation is being arranged for the students and Gift of the Givers has been appointed to manage the feeding programme. The public may drop off any donated essential and food items at the Old Mutual West Campus, 91 Jan Smuts Road in Pinelands.

How to assist the Cape of Good Hope SPCA

The Cape of Good Hope SPCA has also mobilised its teams in the area in order to assist with animal rescue efforts. It says that as soon as it is safe to do so, it will be combing the fire-ravaged areas for any injured animals which will be taken to its short-term wildlife care facility for treatment.

It has requested donations of dressings, bandages, Silbecor ointment, cool packs, fresh fruit and vegetables for the animals and supplies, including energy drinks, energy bars and eyedrops for the team in the field.

“ [SAFE HAVEN] The SPCA, PDSA and Frits Dog Hotel has opened our doors to assist people evacuating their animals free of charge. Details in the link below <https://t.co/PzKoLycXd7>— Cape of Good Hope SPCA (@capespca) April 19, 2021 ”

"We also are calling on the public who reside in an area close to the site of the fire to please place shallow plastic containers filled with water in their gardens for the animals who will be in desperate need of a drink. If you come across an injured animal and it is safe to do so, please try to confine larger animals and place smaller animals in a covered cardboard box to minimise their stress and call the SPCA on 0833261604," it said.

Donation drop-off points include the following Absolute Pets stores:
